

Growing something beautiful: indigenous knowledge systems partnering with science

By Mercy Mokgatle

The Royal Bafokeng Administration (RBA), custodian of the hundreds of projects and programmes that encompass service delivery to the Nation, is addressing the dilemma of a waning agricultural heritage through the development of an Agricultural Masterplan in the Royal Bafokeng Nation (RBN).

The project is aimed at identifying agricultural development projects and agricultural opportunities in the territory that are based on sound environmental and economic principles.

The Bafokeng Nation's vision is encapsulated in PLAN: '35, which acknowledges, amongst other issues, that by 2035 food security will be even more of a challenge than it already is, with more people on the land and less land to farm on.

In the 1800's, when the nation found its home, "they had the whole field open to them, their animals grazed everywhere they chose, and they hunted everywhere at will," says Naboth Mokgatle, grandson of Kgosi Mokgatle, the king of the Bafokeng Nation who made bold decision to keep the land in Bafokeng hands.

Today, this is no longer the case.

By looking to agriculture as a means to move beyond mining, the Royal Bafokeng nation is actualising PLAN '35

Lost Knowledge

In Diepkuil and Rooikraal, two of the 29 villages located in the 5 regions of the Bafokeng territory, the agricultural heritage has been reduced to the level of subsistence farming. While this utilisation of agricultural practises has always been part of the Bafokeng heritage, it is clear when one visits the area that the roaming herds of cattle and fields of produce are a thing of the past.

Kgosana Thabo Mosito says there are no real large-scale agricultural developments in this area, even though there are still large tracts of land that can be utilised.

"People are only focussed on taking care of their own immediate family from their backyard gardens. Those who attempt larger-scale farming do not have the knowledge anymore to cultivate it optimally. We know our forefathers farmed this land successfully, but somehow that knowledge has been forgotten," says Kgosana Mosito.

The Bafokeng plan

The Agriculture Masterplan aims to develop a comprehensive, updatable, spatial decision support system for Royal Bafokeng land. The questions that are being asked include: what should be farmed in which part of the Nation's territory? Which best practice models should be enlisted to work towards sustainable and profitable food production and economic development for the nation? How can we tap into age-old knowledge and customs to build on the heritage of the Nation itself in developing our agricultural prowess?

The project started on 13 January 2011 and is intended to end on 31 March 2013.

The project kicked off with an inception workshop, with representatives from the Royal Bafokeng, the North-West University and other stakeholders, during which the aims and processes were finalised. This is to be followed by a thorough situation analysis, which entails identifying agricultural stakeholders and their roles; developing a natural resource, is to be followed by a dynamic commodity analyses, leading to the identification of economic opportunities, and viable development projects.

These steps are envisioned to lead to the identification of viable agricultural development initiatives, which will be accommodated in the Masterplan. All the information will be packaged into an integrated spatial agricultural decision support system. Part of the project scope is piloting feasible agricultural projects in RBN.

At the heart of the Agriculture Masterplan lies the Bafokeng philosophy of being a forward-thinking traditional community.

The Nation is therefore tapping into its own knowledge-base and the expertise of the elders, whilst also doing long-term, scientific research to assist its agricultural development.

A future beyond mining

Not many young people see farming as an attractive career choice in the Bafokeng nation, as is the case elsewhere. The Royal Bafokeng Enterprise Development (RBED) unit has already trained a group of highly motivated entrepreneurs who want to start agri-businesses and are being supported with greenhouses on what used to be President Paul Kruger's old farm.

The greenhouses were developed through Corporate Social Investment (CSI) funding from Senwes, the second largest agricultural services company in the country. Like all entrepreneurs though, they face many challenges, but they have not given up. With clients like Sun City, they are encouraged to persevere. As is often said locally, "it takes time to grow something beautiful."

Kgosi Leruo Molotlegi, the current monarch of the Nation, says, "I look forward to the day soon when the vegetables, fruits, meats, eggs, and dairy on our tables all bear the Bafokeng brand."

While agriculture in villages like Rooikraal is taking place, overgrown weeds and grass are indicative of an indigenous knowledge base that has fallen by the way-side.

Patient care gets the attention it deserves

By Minah Huma

Ensuring that the Royal Bafokeng Nation has access to high quality, appropriate health as well as social services, is the Health and Social Development Services (HSDS) department's top priority.

HSDS is the second major key focus area and takes up to 14.9% of RBN's total budget.

Dr Keba Mokgethi, the HSDS Executive in the Royal Bafokeng, talks about the department's priorities.

For the past two years, our main focus was on getting infrastructure into place, building and renovating clinics, and preparing equipment. As of this year, we are concentrating on our core business: patient care.

Clinics

The Bafokeng community has access to eight health care facilities owned by the RBN. While the facilities are staffed in partnership with the North West Department of Health, HSDS provides four full time doctors to the clinics and a mobile clinic which visits 23 sites in the RBN area.

Treatment and Prevention of HIV/AIDS

Foremost on the department's plan this year is ensuring access to HIV/Aids treatment and prevention of mother to child transmissions.

This will be achieved by applying the same treatment protocols and monitoring used by Tapologo care centre in our clinics. The centre achieved a zero transmission rate last year.

In terms of the normal treatment of HIV/AIDS patients, HSDS has surpassed 5000 patients in the rolling-out of treatment and ARV's. The plan is to continue with this rollout to reach even more people and also be part of the down referral centres at some of our smaller clinics.

Fight against TB

Some of the ambulances owned by the EMS to help provide the much needed health service to the community

Even though TB treatment is available and provided free of charge in all public health facilities we are still experiencing a huge problem of growing numbers of TB cases in our area. The problem is that many people do not act quickly to get treatment, and those who do obtain the drugs often fail to complete the treatment.

To strengthen the fight against this disease, the department continues to educate people that TB is curable through awareness campaigns, some of which took place last month in our villages as the world celebrated TB day.

Another strategy that we came up with, having realised that Klerksdorp hospital is not able to cope with all the TB cases in the North West, was to look at the possibility of opening a TB ward here in Rustenburg.

Negotiations with Rustenburg Platinum mine in Bleskop, to make available a ward for our MDR and XDR TB patients continue.

In the near future, a health forum which will be responsible for upgrading all services in the Rustenburg area will be established. The forum will also help to deal with the growing number of TB cases in our area.

Emergency Medical Services

Emergency medical services remain an important aspect in the health care service delivery. The Royal Bafokeng EMS with its satellite station at Kanana in the Central region covers all 29 EMS villages.

The EMS call centre has progressed from receiving 200 calls per month to receiving 400 calls per month for emergency and disaster services. This indicates quite an improvement in rendering service to our people.

To further improve its services, the department has increased the level of staff training to intermediate life support.

The conclusion of negotiations with Netcare to train staff members for advanced life support will result in two more people being trained every year for the next three years.

The EMS currently owns four ambulances, a response car and patient transport. Getting in touch with the EMS has become easier; the service is now linked to the emergency number, 112. Members of the community can call the emergency number 112 and ask for the Royal Bafokeng EMS, their calls will immediately be put directly through to our

Estimates of disease burden

Another essential part in health care is determining the disease burden in our area.

Since the department has not been privy to getting information from the DHIS (District Health Information System), a decision has been taken to look at a census of some sort, over and above the research currently undertaken by Research and Planning department.

The aim is to get information and extrapolations into the future to see what the disease burden will be like in the Rustenburg area.

This study is expected to be complete by the end of this year.

Having spent time refurbishing most of our clinics, the department is now ensuring timely access to quality health care for all the members of the community.

RBI's First Literacy Conference

By Denise Kunstler

On 14 May the RBI will be holding a Multi Literacy Conference at the newly opened campus of Lebone II College of the Royal Bafokeng.

With literacy levels at an all time low in South Africa, emphasis needs to be placed on language and the acquisition of language skills. Comprehension of the written word and the development of concepts and thinking skills, particularly in mother-tongue, are critical for the improvement of academic results in all subjects.

To this end we have planned a Multi Literacy Conference to which language teachers across all phases in RBN schools have been invited. The format of the all day event is broken up into plenary sessions, which all delegates will attend, and smaller workshops.

The range of the workshops is wide to appeal to teachers in all phases. Teachers are encouraged to attend workshops on topics focusing on different phases so as to better understand the challenges involved in language teaching at the various levels.

The conference will be officially opened by Mmemogolo Semane Molotlegi and the topics covered by the various presenters will range from poetry writing, learning styles and curriculum mapping to the development of reading skills.

There is an emphasis on the importance of Setswana as mother tongue, and the presentation by Ms Refilwe Ramagoshi on Cultural Norms and Values in Setswana promises to be most informative.

Presenters have been selected for their appeal and expertise and the drumming workshop – raising Literacy through Rhythm and Play promises to be a highlight. The conference will close with an address by Dr Charles Mironko of the RBI on Mother Tongue Neglect – Linguistic Genocide– what an enticing and stimulating topic! Olga Molebatsi, Margaret Ngoako and Refilwe Ramagoshi will be presenting in Setswana.

Attendance at the conference is by invitation only and delegates will be treated to a traditional Setswana lunch. Publishing houses will be exhibiting books to expose teachers to the latest available in the market.

The exposure this day will provide stimulation and encouragement to our teachers to return to their classrooms with renewed vigour and filled with exciting ideas. We know this conference will be the start of many more future such events and we look forward to an enriching day.

RBN Leadership are mobilising the community!

By Werner Van Rensburg

Makgotla Bakhuduthamaga, which include Dikgosana and ex-officio members BoMmadiKgosana, are currently completing the second half of their learning programme: "Community Development through Effective Leadership".

One of the exit outcomes of the programme is that learners should manage two community projects, the first being that Bakhuduthamaga are planning a Regional Makgotla Choir Festival. This entails organizing a choir from each kgotla, meaning that there will be 71 choirs taking part in the festival!

Each Khuduthamaga has been planning the project, step by step, according to SMART objectives and specific deadlines.

As learners, the Bakhuduthamaga are expected to motivate, mobilise and lead makgotla by implementing their acquired knowledge and skills. Each kgotla choir of between 20–40 members is expected to perform three types of songs: Traditional, English and SeTswana.

The choirs have approximately four weeks to fit in practice sessions before the first Regional Makgotla Choir performance. Choirmasters will attend a one-day workshop presented by the Lebone II College of the Bafokeng Choirmaster, Rre Gareth Dry.

A Regional Choir Committee consisting of representatives from each kgotla in the Region is tasked with planning and managing the actual performance as well as ensuring that judges will be invited.

From each Region, one kgotla choir will represent the region at a gala performance where one choir will emerge as the 2011 RBN Kgotla Choir.

Local business owners receive internationally recognized standard of Quality Management training

By Mercy Mokgatle

RBED in partnership with Deutsche Quality System (DQS) South Africa, a German management system solution company based in Johannesburg, had an information session for the local business owners.

The training which was held on 31 March was based on the International Standard Organization (ISO): 9001.

Bafokeng companies from various sectors such as Security, Cleaning services, Manufacturing and Construction, attended the training session. An important part of the training which caught the attention of the attendees was how to produce high quality service and products in all stages of the business.

Other areas of the workshop included lessons on what quality is, why is it important in business and lessons on how quality management impacts on business in today's world.

ISO 9001:2008 is the latest edition of the standard that establishes the requirements for a quality management system. It applies to the business processes that create and control the products and services which a business supplies. In addition, it prescribes systematic control of activities to ensure that the needs and expectations of customers are met.

Business owner Thabiso Mamba Moema, Operational Manager at Phemela Mmanape Security, said he learnt a lot from the information session. "The information session was an eye-opener. Phemela Mmanape is a relatively new company and it still needs a lot of grooming in order to operate efficiently and supply a superior service to the market", he said.

Another business owner who benefited a lot from the training is Molefi Diale, Director of Segodiso Steelwork and Construction. With the skill he acquired, Diale vowed to make sure that his company implements quality management and all the processes that will guarantee the success of his company.

By implementing this model, business operations become systematic thereby allowing the businesses to meet their business objective: keeping their customers satisfied.

To become certified, businesses have to meet all the requirements of ISO 9001 followed by a full on-site audit to ensure that working practices observe the procedures and stated objectives and that appropriate records are kept.

The Enterprise Development Manager at RBED, Zula Tlholoe,

RBED

Royal Bafokeng Enterprise Development

reckons that such training sessions are important, as they offer business owners knowledge on global standards of quality management.

"The ultimate goal for RBED is to have businesses that are certified according to ISO, so that they can become ready to fulfill the ideal of developing an economically self-sustaining nation", he said.

He added that as a management tool; ISO: 9001 helps companies to effectively and efficiently manage and sustain their businesses. "The SMME's should now go back to their businesses and implement what they have learned", he concluded.

Local Business owners who attended the ISO training workshop at RBED

Planned trainings and information sessions for April to May 2011:

Information sessions

- Franchise information session
- Business financing workshop

Training

- Project management
- Business management
- Financial management

Help Us to Help You – Pay for Your Services

Maintenance of water infrastructure is costly!

It costs a lot of money to get clean water and even more to get the water supplied to your home. RBA spends millions of Rands every month to provide Morafe with clean water.

How is water supplied to our homes?

After the water is pumped into the local community reservoirs it must be distributed to Morafe through a network of pipelines. The RBA's network of 11 major reservoirs provides clean water to individual consumers. All these must be maintained on a regular basis and the cost is high.

The Call Centre

On average, the RBA Call Centre receives a total of 1,152 queries per month from the community. The reports range from pipe bursts, meter leakages, house connections, to sewer blockages. More than 600 calls go through the toll free number while approximately 300 office visits are recorded per month. All these need to be acted upon swiftly to ensure efficient and continued service.

How to pay your bill

IMPORTANT! - Water Shortage

Rand Water is appealing to all its customers in Photsaneng, Thekwana and Mfidikwe to use water sparingly to assist them to effectively manage the supply into the area. Rand Water is currently experiencing huge draw offs on P1 & P2 pipelines supplying the Rustenburg areas, as a result, the Barnardsvlei Reservoir is quickly emptying.

Persons with Disabilities from the Bafokeng scooped medals at the Nedbank National Championships

By Mercy Mokgatle

Affiliated to the North West Sport Association for the Physically Disabled and Visually Impaired, four physically disabled Bafokeng, under the HSDS disability program, took part in the Nedbank sponsored championships. The tournament was held at Olympia Stadium in Rustenburg from the 2nd of March.

Nkono Kwele, Martin Modisane, Ida Matshitse and Peter Mokuia were part of the many participants from the North West area, taking part in the championships.

The competition kicked off on Saturday where participants took part in sporting codes ranging between, athletics, judo, cycling, goal ball, boccia, seven-a-side football and power lifting.

The Nedbank National Championships for the Physically Disabled is presented by the South African Sports Association for the Physically Disabled (SASAPD).

As a proud partner of Team South Africa, Nedbank has made a substantial investment in the growth and development of South African athletes with disabilities through this annual tournament.

This multi-sport event has proven to be the feeder system for the National Paralympic team and other representative teams. The championships also encompass athletes who are visually impaired.

Gold medal winner in shotput, Ida Matshitse from Phokeng who uses a wheel-chair, couldn't hide her excitement. "At first I was scared but as I entered the pitch, I told myself that I would do what I know and what I had come to do. I did know that I would get something for taking part, but getting a gold medal blew me away. I am very happy", she said.

Peter Mokuia from Chaneng, emerged a winner of a silver medal in discus, despite having very little time for practice before the tournament.

"This is the first ever medal I have won since starting to participate in 2009. Seeing Oscar Pistorius, was the most exciting moment for me", he said. Mokuia has lost the use of his left arm and hand.

Participants in the tournament were chosen through a classification process where the disability of an individual was assessed, and from then on that individual would be placed in a particular code that would suit their disability.

As a build-up to this tournament, trials took place last year where classified candidates participated to qualify for this year's Nedbank National Championship.
